Dear Fire Investigator,

How will the court decide? The testimony of fire investigators will inevitably determine where the fire started and whether it was intentionally set, an accident, negligence, or an act of God. The stakes in these cases are enormous!

FIRE INVESTIGATOR'S LAW BULLETIN, a reporting service written in plain English for fire investigators like you, will keep you right on the cutting edge of the most pivotal fire investigation legal issues. Our mission is to help you learn from the experiences of other arson, insurance claim, and fire investigators who not only investigate a fire scene, but also testify in court to support their findings.

Determining the origin and cause of fires has become extremely complex and scientific, and now involves the professional skills of many people. If there appears to be more than one point of origin and arson is suspected, is there evidence of an accelerant? Was the property owner experiencing domestic or financial problems? Were valuable items taken from the house before the fire? What are the most effective questions to ask an arson suspect?

FIRE INVESTIGATOR'S LAW BULLETIN brings to your fingertips the most important cases involving investigations and testimony of the most experienced fire investigators in the country. Many of these investigators are also licensed electricians or law enforcement professionals with arrest authority. We help you learn from their experiences and avoid their mistakes!

Here are just a few of the types of pivotal evidence we report on:

- Electrical fires – outlets, cords, appliances, fuse boxes, copper wire melting pattern
- Forensic evidence, scientific testing of debris, effect of heat, melting points
- Burn patterns, smoke patterns, the colors of flames and smoke
- Accelerants, burning characteristics of various types – use of trained canines
- Photographic evidence, chromatography
- Building an arson case with only circumstantial evidence
- Videotapes from nearby buildings, stores, or public areas
